Canada Post delivers an Olympic surprise

CHARLES J.G. VERGE

On July 11, 2003 — just nine days after Canada was chosen as the host country for the XXI Olympic Winter Games — Canada Post issued a stamp to celebrate this significant event in Canadian history.

The Olympic Winter Games of 2010 will be held in Vancouver, British Columbia, in Canada's southwest corner, and at the world famous Whistler ski resort situated about 70 miles or so to the north. To ensure that its new stamp would be available in a timely fashion, Canada Post overprinted "Vancouver 2010" in red on its current 48¢ definitive Flag stamp, Scott 1931. Both the original issue of the definitive stamp and the overprinted version are available in booklet format only.

Normally, overprinted stamps are previously printed stamps that are sent through a printing press a second time to receive the overprint. In this case, the timing was perfect, as Canada Post was ordering a new printing of the self-adhesive booklet of 30 stamps for current use.

Instead of the normal overprinting process — which was tried but proved unsuccessful — the red inscription "Vancouver 2010" was added directly onto the printing plate and applied during production of the new stamps.

Purists, therefore, might debate the validity of the term "overprint" for this stamp. However, if one looks at the stamp carefully, it certainly looks like an overprint, as no part of the design was removed to fit in the wording. In fact, the original design can be seen through the red overprinted text.

In addition, the same red overprinted text has been added three times to the 30-stamp booklet cover (Figure 1). The 30-stamp booklet, Scott 1931b, is scored vertically and can be separated into three booklets of 10 stamps for counter sales (Scott 1931a), so each 10-stamp booklet shows the overprint once on its cover.

As these are definitive stamps (although with a commemorative bent), they could be reprinted should stocks of the Flag booklets not suffice before another Flag stamp is issued for the new 49¢ domestic rate that is to take effect in January 2004. This would not be a first, since Canada Post reprinted the 48¢ Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee definitive-commemorative stamp of 2002 (Scott 1932) when it was required, and committed to do the same with this year's 48¢ Coronation definitive-commemorative (Scott 1987).

the "Vancouver 2010" overprint three times. When the larger booklet is separated into three booklets of 10 stamps, the overprint appears once on each cover.

However, such a reprint for the Vancouver overprint is unlikely for two reasons. The first reason comes in the form of a Canada Post memorandum that accompanied the booklets when they were shipped to post offices. It is addressed to "all post offices in British Columbia and selected major post offices across the country."

The memo reads, "Your outlet has been selected to receive an outgoing-rate stamps.

Canada Post has a bar-code identifier on each booklet of 10 and uses point-of-sale scanning to calculate the number of items sold, even when the illustration on the cover of the 30-stamp booklet spreads over the three booklets of 10. This is why the distribution throughout the country is calculated in booklets of 10.

Sixty percent (180,000 booklets) of the printing of 300,000 "Vancouver 2010" 10-stamp booklets was distributed to British Columbia post offices, while 113,000 were sent to major post offices throughout the rest of Canada. The remaining 7,000 booklets of 10 have been made available to collectors through Canada Post's National Philatelic Centre at 75 St. Ninian St., Antigonish, NS, B2G 2R8, Canada. Collectors can obtain more information by calling toll free: 1-800-565-4362.

Canada Post reports that the 7,000 booklets set aside are more than is needed to supply their account holders' requests for booklets.

The quantity of 3 million "Vancouver 2010" stamps issued is comparable to many other Canadian commemoratives released over the last three years. The 47¢ Summit of the Americas stamp of 2001 (Scott 1902); the 47¢ Armenian Church (Scott 1905); the 47¢ Royal Canadian Legion (Scott 1926); the 48¢ International Teacher's Day stamp of 2002 (Scott 1961); the 48¢ Toronto Stock Exchange (Scott 1962); and the eight different University stamps issued in 2002 and 2003 all had print runs of 3 million stamps.

No official Canada Post first-day cover was prepared on July 11, but I am aware of some 100 privately prepared FDCs, including the example shown in Figure 2. Canada Post has also said that the overprinted stamp would not be part of its annual Souvenir Collection that will be issued in November 2003.

There are common traits shared by the regular definitive stamp and booklets and the "Vancouver 2010" overprinted stamp and booklets, but there are also differences. Common to both issues is the bar code identifier (0-63491-02025-4) printed on the back of each booklet of 10. The copyright notice (© automatic allocation of the definitive flag stamps, available in a booklet of 10 or 30 stamps. The stamps and booklet cover are over-printed with 'Vancouver 2010.' This product is not available for reorder, as they are a limited quantity intended to commemorate the communities of Vancouver and Whistler being selected to host the 2010 Winter Olympics and Paralympic Games."

The second reason is that in the summer, and during the phase-out period of a postage rate, Canada Post personnel substitute stamps and booklets they have in stock when orders are received, so as to diminish as far as possible the stock of the 2001) is the same for both and appears in the lower right corner of each stamp.

The colors of the stamp and booklet are the same except for normal variations in the intensity of inks that is often found in different printings of the same stamp. For example, the black of the "Vancouver 2010" overprinted stamp and booklet cover seems more gray-black than solid black.

Both stamps are printed on the same coated-paper stock. The rate information, plate markings and all other printing on the booklet covers is the same.

However,

along with the overprint, there are some interesting differences.

First, the glue that keeps the "Vancouver 2010" overprint booklet closed is peelable and doesn't tear the booklet when a customer opens it. This is a major improvement.

Second, there is no philatelic stock of the overprinted issue, only counter stock. The difference is in the way the booklets are closed. The counter stock or field stock is glued shut, while the philatelic stock uses the tongue-and-groove tab at the upper part of the booklet to close it.

Third, there is also a slight difference in the wavy-line die-cut edges of the stamps, particularly visible in the cuts at the bottom two corners. The tips of the corner die cuts are more pointed on the overprinted stamp than the same die cuts on the nonoverprinted stamp, as the comparison photo in Figure 3 shows.

There is also a constant variety on the overprinted issue. A red dot, somewhat like a guide dot of yore, is found in the right side margin, next to the overprint. It is in the first row, stamp 3, of the booklet of 30 stamps, which is stamp 1 in the right-hand side booklet of 10. It occurs in every second booklet of 30, or every sixth booklet of 10 (Figure 4).

Post offices around the world create material for their operating needs that is not philatelic but which, because of its nature, fits well into a collection or display-class exhibit. One such item is the packing slip shown in Figure 5.

The "Vancouver 2010" overprinted booklets of 30 are shrink-wrapped in packages of 25 booklets of 30. Each package has a packing slip. The six-digit number (111154) on line 1 of the slip is the product number. The product number for the regular Flag definitive is 411154. Line 2 reads 4500010640, which is Canada Post's purchase-order tracking number with the stamp printer, Ashton-Potter. Line 3 identifies the issue as the "Olympic Special." It also confirms that Canada Post calculates production in booklets of 10, as the number 75 following the name represents the number of 10-stamp booklets in the package. Finally, line 4 gives the date the printing was completed: 07-09-03.

Some criticism of this stamp may be expected, including complaints about its targeted distribution, or the fact that the overprint is on a stamp that doesn't show either Vancouver or Whistler, or even that Canada Post is out to reap financial benefits and is jumping on the bandwagon too quickly.

As for jumping on the bandwagon, I should hope so. It's about time Canadians stopped being staid people who don't celebrate anything for fear they might offend someone.

And so what if the stamp pictures the Canada Post headquarters in Ottawa? It shouldn't matter. The stamp is the current definitive, after all, and Canada Post was a strong supporter of the country's Olympic Winter Games bid. What matters is that Canada Post did something, did it in a timely manner, and did it in a way that was financially responsible.

I don't think there is any validity to the suggestion that the issue is some kind of financial grab for Canada Post. The 3 million stamps would have been printed anyway to fulfill the postal need for more definitives. Canada Post is producing no first-day covers and no collateral philatelic products, so that means no extra profit from this issue. And in addition, the stamp will not appear in the annual Souvenir Collection, the coffee table book that Canada Post issues every November, which includes Canada's stamps of the past year.

By issuing the stamp, Canada Post shows the world that it and Canada are proud that Vancouver and Whistler were chosen to host the XXI Olympic Winter Games. Canada Post is Canada's fourth largest employer, and with a $6 billion bottom line it is one of Canada's major corporate citizens. As such, it has a social responsibility to participate in the life and promote the achievements of Canada and Canadians.

Canada Post was an early supporter of the Vancouver bid, and, I am told, will continue to be there for the long haul to 2010. Collectors can watch for more Vancouver stamps, but these will probably not appear until after the 2006 XX Olympic Winter Games take place in Turin, Italy. An unwritten rule prevents the issue of stamps by host countries until after the close of the previous Games.

In case you were wondering, it has been 39 years since Canada last issued an overprinted stamp. That provisional stamp, Scott 430 (Figure 6), was created in 1964 when Canada's airmail rate increased from 7¢ to 8¢. Two scarce varieties of this overprinted stamp exist: a pair that includes one stamp without the surcharge (Scott 430a), and an inverted surcharge on the gum side of the stamp (Scott 430b). Only one example of each of these varieties is recorded.

I am indebted to Robin Harris of Winnipeg, Manitoba, webmaster to the Royal Philatelic Society of Canada (RPSC), and one of Canada's expert philatelists on the definitive stamps of the Elizabethan era, for letting me know about the die-cut differences on the new stamp. Thanks also to Rick Penko of Winnipeg, vice president of the RPSC, an eclectic collector, and a member of Canada's Stamp Advisory Committee, for making me aware of the red-dot variety.
