

The Establishment of the General Post Office at Dublin in 1782

compiled by Charles J. G. Verge

In an April 25, 1999 Philatelic Literature Postal Auction, Cavendish Philatelic Auctions of Shrewsbury, England sold a 1782 leather backed ledger to the Collectors Club of New York. The handwritten ledger (105 pages) contains the names, positions, salaries, etc. of those people working for the General Post Office in the United Kingdom, the West Indies and Quebec. In it can be found much interesting information concerning the Secretaries, Accountants General, Letter Carriers, Inland and Foreign Post Office employees as well as those employed by the Penny Post and Cross Post offices. Three pages (pp. 35-37) list the names of the employees at the GPO in Dublin, their titles and emoluments. The listing is of interest to students of Irish postal history since it allows us to put a name to some of the interesting positions in the GPO at Dublin and to see, based on their salaries, the important roles they played in conveying the mails throughout Ireland. I hope the following listing will be of interest.

¹The reader will note that several positions were held by the same individual. Many of these positions could be performed separately or there was an assistant to do the work.

²It would be interesting to know why there is such a discrepancy between the per annum salaries of the Assistants to the Clerks of the Roads. A £5 difference between Samuel Jones and James Twigg could be explained by seniority or years of service or the complexity of the North Road, but how do you explain that Sheff. Hamilton earns double Samuel Jones' salary (£70 vs. £35)?
